In early 2010, a business was started offering consulting services to various fields of industry. Within a few months, an elderly family member was diagnosed with a terminal disease which Plaintiff came alongside family member to stand as primary caregiver. Plaintiff needed to sell almost all assets to facilitate caregiver status and live at family member's home. Plaintiff lived off of sold assets and put business on hold. After the death of family member almost two years later, Plaintiff tried restarting business with limited success in the 8 years prior to the pandemic and since the pandemic has suffered even more financial hardship keeping business going while traveling to meet and stay with clients every few months, trading Room and board at each stay with limited funds.
